

Interfaith Cooperation

In Morocco, Jewish cemeteries are being used to host plant nurseries run by local Muslim communities.

By TPN, in Africa, World, Community · 21 Mar 2026 · 0 Comments

Credits: envato elements; Author: oneinchpunchphotos;

The initiative, known as the “House of Life,” uses land lent by the Jewish community to grow fruit and medicinal plants. The nurseries help address climate challenges, including deforestation, erosion and food insecurity. The project aims to reduce rural poverty, support agriculture, and revive interfaith cooperation.

Próximo vídeo em 1

Cancelar

Credits: Unsplash; Author: @dmadventure;

The initiative began in a village near Marrakech, where a 700-year-old cemetery now hosts a nursery producing tens of thousands of saplings annually. Since 2012, nearly 300,000 tree saplings have been grown and distributed to around 1,500 farming families. The High Atlas Foundation supports the project by training farmers and building infrastructure such as water wells. The model is expanding across Morocco, although land ownership issues remain a barrier to wider rollout.

Gold Hits Record Levels – Trade and Capture the Opportunity

Capitalize on price swings in gold. Fast execution, advanced charts, and tools made for new and pro traders. Trading derivatives involves high risk to your capital.

IC | Sponsored

Learn More

Gold Is Surging in 2026 – Smart Traders Are Already In